Building Seagram By Phyllis Lambert

The Seagram building rises over New York's Park Avenue, seeming to float above the street with perfect lines of bronze and glass. Considered one of the greatest icons of twentieth-century architecture, the building was commissioned by Samuel Bronfman, founder of the Canadian distillery dynasty Seagram. Bronfman's daughter Phyllis Lambert was twenty-seven years old when she took over the search for an architect and chose Mies van der Rohe (1886–1969), a pioneering modern master of what he termed “skin and bones” architecture. Mies, who designed the elegant, deceptively simple thirty-eight-story tower along with Philip Johnson (1906–2005), emphasized the beauty of structure and fine materials, and set the building back from the avenue, creating an urban oasis with the building's plaza. Through her choice, Lambert established her role as a leading architectural patron and singlehandedly changed the face of American urban architecture.

Building Seagram is a comprehensive personal and scholarly history of a major building and its architectural, cultural, and urban legacies. Lambert makes use of previously unpublished personal archives, company correspondence, and photographs to tell an insider's view of the debates, resolutions, and unknown dramas of the building's construction, as well as its crucial role in the history of modern art and architectural culture.

Review

“[Building Seagram] should be required reading for everyone who plans to build in the public realm...”
—Form Magazine
(Form Magazine 2013-03-25)

“Building Seagram . . . is something of a joint biography: a history of this stately Park Avenue landmark that many consider the pinnacle of postwar architecture in New York, rendered through the lens of her vivid memories of its invention and of her privileged early years as the daughter of the liquor baron Samuel Bronfman, who founded the Seagram distilling empire. The book reveals many new details about a building that remains among the most studied of the modern era.”—Mark Lamster, New York Times
(Mark Lamster New York Times)

[Lambert;s] handsomely illustrated book, Building Seagram (Yale University Press), chronicles a golden moment in architectural history...” —Robert Fulford, National Post
(Robert Fulford National Post 2013-04-09)

“With detailed recollections, snippets of personal letters, poignant anecdotes, and sharp analyses, Lambert’s tome delivers a fascinating insider’s report of the events leading up to Seagram’s construction as well as the legacy that has followed... Arguably one of the most critical contributions of “Building Seagram,” however, is the way it illuminates the history of not just the monument itself but also the social climate in which Seagram’s extraordinary effects were felt.” —Artinfo

“a fascinating account” —Metropolis

“Lambert’s tour of the genesis and life of the building is an engrossing one, offering a superb account of both the unglamorous planning issues and the specific design choices involved in the project.”—Anthony Paletta, Architectural Record

“A fascinating story about New York’s built environment and those who have made it a livable space.”—Jewish Daily Forward
(Jewish Daily Forward)

“Sumptuous. . . . No one could tell the history of the most seminal office building of the 20th century as well as Lambert. . . . An exemplary architectural monograph.”—Dietrich Neumann, Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians
(Dietrich Neumann Journal of the Society of Architectural Historians 2013-11-21)

“In its own modest way, this monograph on modernism’s most acclaimed tower is as elegant and refined as Mies van der Rohe’s glass temple on New York’s Park Avenue. The author is the daughter of one-time Seagram chairman Samuel Bronfman, who asked her to find the best architect for the job. The period photographs are exquisite; the tales of Mies at work are a primer on how discipline can translate to beauty.”—John King, San Francisco Chronicle

“Juicy while retaining a scholarly rigor.”—Architizer (Architizer)

“Her account captures some of the excitement one feels when one approaches the slender tower for the first time.”—Christopher Turner, London Review of Books
